Length: 4 hrs and 34 mins. It comes across as a cliché justification of the hard times. There has been great joy and devastating sorrow. Related Products. But, what about the adult addicted to drugs or suffering from mental illness who blames, hurts, abuses, and even steals from those who love them because of their condition? One thing that troubled me throughout was that there was a lot of talk in the beginning about her strained relationship with her mom and what being on The Biggest Loser together would do for that, and I don't feel like that healing process was really discussed. We are more apt to think about times like when my brother went missing at about age 10 in the city of Victoria – my mother was frantic – this was not our city and he was lost. I don't care what you label me or how many times you come for me. It is good to love your home and family.
