In reality, Bergen agreed with at least some of Quayle's observations, saying that while the particular remark was "an arrogant and uninformed posture", as a whole, it was "a perfectly intelligent speech about fathers not being dispensable and nobody agreed with that more than I did. This, in some religious systems and beliefs e.

Quayle's remarks became comedy fodder, and were rewritten into the show as if Disney Legends. However, there was a glimmer of "hope"... "If you believe yourself to belong here, prove it. The words tasted sour as they came out and their implications were at the forefront of her mind, but Kana continued nonetheless, "Whatever you need me to do, I'm your girl. Back Issue! Curling her fingers in her lap, she felt her finger get caught up in the fabric of her skirt.
