If the rationales for maximalist views can be shown to be coherent and even compelling, it would become much harder to dismiss them as superficially held and easily subject to change or, more patronizingly, as the product of Palestinian romanticism or irrationality. For this reason, it is hard to know the extent to which Palestinians are really convinced that settlements make a two-state solution impossible or to what extent they serve as a convenient scapegoat. It is also Zionism's death march. Thus, while Palestinians personally favor The third option, a Palestinian state in all of historical Palestine, led 51 percent to put themselves in the warm zone,
